

CASTLEBAR,

THE county town of Mayo, is 120 miles west of Dublin, 8 north east of Westport, 16 west of Ballina, 14 west north west of Ballinrobe, and 13 north west of Clare; it is the property of Lord Lucan. In 1798, Castlebar was in possession of the French invaders, under General Humbert, for nine days, but, on the approach of Marquis Cornwallis, they retreated precipitately towards Sligo, and soon after surrendered themselves prisoners of war. In the church yard is a monument to the memory of five soldiers who fell at this time. The public buildings are the castle, which stands on a commanding situation, and is now occupied as a barrack; the jail; a fine, convenient court-house; another barrack; a county infirmary; a linen-hall; public shambles; a fine spacious church, with a very lofty steeple; a Catholic chapel, and a Methodist meeting-house. The business of this place is principally carried on in one main street, and its chief public buildings are seated round a spacious green, through which is a gravel promenade, overshadowed by very fine trees. Here are a distillery, and a brewery; but the chief support of the town is an extensive market, particularly for linen, which is held on Saturday. There are three fairs in the year, viz. on the 11th of May, the 9th of July, and the 18th of November. The population is 5120.

POST OFFICE—Post Mistress, Miss Bell. The Dublin mail is despatched at five in the morning, and arrives at eight in the evening.

CASTLEREA,

IN the county of Roscommon, is a considerable market and post town, situated 84 miles west north west of Dublin, 14 north west of Roscommon, 14 south of Boyle, and 14 west of Strokestown. It is the property of Lord Henry Sandford, at present a minor. This nobleman's domain and mansion are extremely interesting, the park is well planted with wood, and the river Suck runs through its centre, passing immediately before the windows of the castle. Indeed the whole neighbourhood is thickly strewn with beautiful seats. Here are the remains of an ancient bridge, well worth the notice of the antiquarian.

The public buildings are a neat Gothic church; a chapel; and a dispensary, supported by subscription. There are also extensive bleach grounds; and the flax mills, under the patronage of the Sandford family, are a great benefit to the neighbouring peasantry, as a very small sum only is charged for breaking and dressing the material. A market is held on Wednesday for butter and oats, and another on Saturday for cattle and provisions. The three fairs are on the 23rd of May, the 21st of June, and the 7th of November. The population amounts to 1940.

POST OFFICE.—Post Mistress, Miss Bell. The Dublin mail is despatched by horse at six in the morning to Roscommon, and returns at three in the afternoon.
