FERMOY,

IN the county of Cork, is delightfully situated on the banks of the Blackwater, and is distant 108 miles south-west of Dublin, and 18 north-east of Cork. This place is a proof of what public spirited perseverance can effect; as in the year 1796, when it came into the possession of the late John Anderson, Esq. it consisted only of a carman's inn, and a few wretched mud cabins, whereas now it is a regular well-built town, and contains an industrious and respectable population of six thousand inhabitants, exclusive of the numerous military stationed in the barracks. The first act of this enlightened individual was to improve the roads, and to establish mail coaches, both of which have materially contributed to the prosperity of Fermoy and the neighbouring country, as the high road from Dublin to Cork passes through them. The river divides the town into two unequal parts, the larger of which is on its southern bank. On the northern side are situated a large military hospital, two extensive barracks capable of containing five thousand men, and the church, which was built in 1802. In the other part are three hotels, an extensive ale and porter brewery, a considerable flour mill, a paper mill, a farming implement manufactory, a carriage manufactory, an endowed school, a court-house, where the sessions are held, and where a highly respectable bench of magistrates assemble for the weekly administration of justice, an excellent seminary for boarders under the direction of the Rev. Francis Jones, rector of the parish, and a spacious Catholic chapel built in 1811. There is here every facility for the education of a family, as good masters in the different branches of literature and accomplishments are always to be had, and the markets are plentifully and cheaply supplied; the corn-market, in particular, is now one of the most considerable in Ireland. Fairs are held on the 21st of June, the 20th of August, and the 7th of November.
