KILWORTH.

SITUATE at the foot of a ridge of a mountains, is a small town in the county of Cork, distant one hundred and eight miles s.s.w. of Dublin, twenty north-by-east of Cork, twenty-six north-west of Youghal, and six south-east of Mitchelstown. It contains one church, an ancient structure, with a tower built about the year 1742; a Catholic chapel lately erected at a short distance from the town, and capable of containing a thousand individuals; a parish school for the education of an unlimited number of children, which was endowed by the late Colvill Moore, esq; and a ladies' society for the relief of the indigent in the vicinity, under the patronage of Lady Mount-Cashel, whose exertions in behalf of the poor of every denomination are unremitting. Contiguous to the town, mills for dressing flax have recently been erected by the Earl of Mount-Cashel. This establishment is a source of infinite benefit to the labouring classes, to whom flax is distributed for the purpose of manufacture so judiciously, as to provide many families with constant employment, which is the means of promoting a spirit of industry among the children, and of enabling parents to provide for the comfortable maintenance and education of their offspring. Adjacent to the town is Moor Park, the residence of the noble Earl above-named, adjoining whose improvements is the castle of Clough-leagh, boldly situated on the banks of the river Funcheon, which gently meanders through the demesne, presenting various delightful prospects. This castle formerly withstood several sieges. In this town are held six annual fairs, viz:—on the 25th of January, on Easter Tuesday, the first Thursday after Trinity Sunday, the 11th of September, the 21st of November, and the 10th of December. There is a market here every Friday, but from its contiguity to the more plentiful supplies at the Fermoy market, little business is done.

POST OFFICE.—Post Master, Mr. Wm. Simmons. The mail for Dublin, &c. by Clonmel is despatched at half past eleven in the morning, and arrives at two in the afternoon. The mail for Cork, &c. is despatched every day at two in the afternoon, and arrives at half-past eleven in the morning.

KINSALE,

IS distant 11 miles and a half south of Cork, in which county it is situated, 136 south west of Dublin, and nine east south east of Bandon. Its harbour, at the mouth of the Bandon, is very commodious and safe, and the river is navigable for large vessels nearly twelve miles above the town. Kinsale is of great antiquity and received grants of various franchises and liberties from many of the Kings of England. Those charters rendered it, in some measure, a republic, and gave a power to the corporation of appointing a recorder, and trying all manner of offences occurring within the town and liberties (treasons only excepted), and a court of record, which has jurisdiction over the recovery of debts to any amount within the liberties, and by sea as far as Dursey island. In the year 1660 the charters were forfeited, because the inhabitants had permitted the Spaniards to land and take possession of the town; but after the reduction of the place, in the same year, they were reinstated in their privileges, and in the two succeeding reigns received considerable marks of royal munificence. In the reign of Charles the 2d. in 1670 the Earl of Ormond gave the name of Charles-fort; this was finished at an expense of 70,000l. It stands at some distance below the town, is very strong, and completely commands the harbour, as ships must pass it within pistol shot. This fort and a commodious barrack near the town are capable of containing 2000 men. When James the 2d. came over to Ireland from France, he landed at this port on the 12th March 1688, but notwithstanding the strength of the works, in the Autumn of 1690, it was reduced by the Earl of Marlborough, who took the old fort by storm, the Irish governor being killed in the breach; Charles-fort then surrendered, and the town fell of course. The ruins of the old fort now form a very picturesque appearance from the public walks about the town. Kinsale is built on sloping ground between Compass-hill and the harbour and extends about an English mile in length. Near the centre of the town on an elevated situation there are assembly, reading and news rooms, and a beautiful public walk called the bowling green, ornamented with trees and commanding a delightful view of the harbour and of the two well built villages of Cove and Scilly. This place is peculiarly adapted for sea bathing, which may be enjoyed at all times of the tide, and has two very neat and convenient establishments for hot and cold baths, one at the village of Scilly, and the other in the town. These, together with the salubrity of the air, the cheapness of provisions, and the agreeable society which the place affords, render it a place of very fashionable resort during the summer months. There are docks and yards for repairing ships, a custom house with the proper establishment of officers, and the merchants who reside here, trade very extensively. The fisheries are prosecuted with spirit, the produce of which, with grain and provisions, forms the principal articles of exportation. The public institutions are a fever hospital, a dispensary, a charitable loan, three schools for the gratuitous education of poor children, and a savings' bank. The places of public worship are the parish church, two exteriorly plain, interiorly neat and commodious chapels for Wesleyan Methodists, and two Catholic chapels. Kinsale gives the title of baron to the ancient and noble family of De Courcy, and returns one member to the imperial parliament; the present representative is Admiral Sir Josias Rowley, Bart. It is governed by a sovereign and recorder. Fairs are held on the fourth of May, the fourth of September, and the 21st of November. The population is estimated at 8,500.

POST OFFICE, Main-street.—Post Mistress, Ann Furzer. The mail to Dublin and all parts of the United Kingdom is despatched every day at two, and arrives at eleven in the morning. All letters must be put into the Post Office by half past one.
