YOUGHAL,

In the county of Cork, is situated on an arm of the sea, 124 miles south east of Dublin, and on the mail road between Waterford and Cork. It is situated at the base of a lofty hill, near the head of the bay, on the south side of the Blackwater river. It is governed by a mayor and other municipal officers, and returns one member to the Imperial Parliament. Youghal has a safe and commodious harbour, in which vessels, protected from all winds, can ride in twenty-four feet water, at the lowest ebb. There are several good quays and piers, which materially facilitate the landing and shipping of merchandise. The town consists principally of one street, nearly a mile in length, which is divided into two parts, and denominated North and South Main-street; this separation is made by a lofty square building, called the Clock-gate, from its containing the town clock, surmounted by a cupola, with a gilt ball and vane; it appears, from the inscription on the south side, to have been built in 1777. Over the arch, which crosses the street, is the town prison, with the gaoler's rooms, &c. Youghal was incorporated by King Edward IV. and invested with important privileges, which were confirmed and augmented by succeeding monarchs. In the reign of Elizabeth it held out against the Desmond rebellion, in favour of the Crown, and though obliged to submit to Cromwell, for want of succour, yet in the year 1648, the corporation were among the first to proclaim Charles II. King of Great Britain and Ireland. In North Main-street are the remains of a Castle. Youghal consists but of one parish, the rector of which is the Bishop of Cloyne. The church is a very ancient Gothic structure; its nave is 132 feet long and 66 broad, and the square tower is 32 feet high. There is also a chapel of ease recently erected, and situated on the site of the cemetery of an abbey for Franciscans, which was founded by Maurice Fitzgerald, Lord Justice of Ireland, in the year 1224. The Catholics and Presbyterians have each a chapel, the Methodists two, and the Quakers a meeting-house. The free school was founded by the first Earl of Cork, and an almshouse for six widows provides each of them with lodgings, firing, and five pounds per annum. Here are also an infirmary and dispensary, a commodious fish market, situate on one of the quays, and a market for butter. The principal trade of the town is in corn, large quantities of which are exported; there is also considerable business done in provisions, and the place has a share in the Greenland trade. The woollen manufacture, which formerly flourished here, has entirely ceased, though there is still some business done in wool-combing. Two manufactories of brown stone pottery are in a flourishing condition. It is generally supposed that the potato, now so valuable an article, was first introduced from America by Sir Walter Raleigh into Ireland, and planted in the gardens of Youghal, which is not improbable, since this was part of his estate, which he sold to the Earl of Cork. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on the 27th of May and the 18th of October.

POST OFFICE, South Main-street.—Post Master, Mr. Richard Taylor. The Dublin, Waterford, and English letters are despatched every morning at nine, and the Cork and southern letters every evening at five. The letter box is closed half an hour previous to despatch.
