HISTORICAL DESCRIPTION

OR THE

PROVINCE OF ULSTER.

ULSTER, the northern province of Ireland, is bounded on the north and west by the Atlantic ocean, on the east by the Irish Channel, and the Irish Sea, and on the south east and south west by the provinces of Leinster and Connaught. Its greatest extent from Malin Bay in the west, to Quintin Point in the east, is upwards of 100 Irish miles, and from Malin Head in the north, to the most southern point of the county of Cavan is between eighty and ninety; the circumference, including the windings and turnings, is about 460 miles; and the area, or superficial contents, 3,180,699 acres. Ulster abounds in lakes and rivers, which supply it with a great variety of fine fish, besides what it has from the sea, by which a great part of it is bounded. The southern parts are rich, fertile, well cultivated and inclosed; but the northern are open and mountainous. The number of counties in this province is nine; the number of houses and inhabitants in each county is as follows:

	Houses.	Inhabitants.
Antrim .. ..	no returns	261,601

It also contains 54 baronies, and 313 parishes.

THE COUNTY OF ANTRIM is bounded on the north by the Atlantic, on the east by the Irish Channel, on the south by the county of Down, and on the west by Lough Neagh and Londonderry. Its greatest extent from north to south is about 42 Irish miles; and from east to west about twenty-four. Its superficial contents comprise 420,999 acres Irish plantation measure, including bogs, mountain and waste. It contains eight baronies, exclusive of the county of the town of Carrickfergus:—Upper and Lower Massarene, Upper and Lower Antrim, Upper and Lower Toome, Kilconway, Upper and Lower Dunluce, Carey, Upper and Lower Glenarm, Upper and Lower Belfast, and these are subdivided into seventy-seven parishes. The surface of Antrim is level along the river Bann, and the general soil of the plains and valleys is a strong loam; in some places gravelly and sandy soils prevail. Besides the Bann, the country is watered by several small rivers—the Bush, which falling first westerly from the north eastern upland, turns to the north, and seven miles afterwards joins the sea at Bush Mills;—the Maine, proceeding from a small lake north of Clogh, runs in a broad channel with finely wooded banks by Randalstown, parallel, but in an opposite course, to the Bann, until it merges in Lough Neagh;—the Six Mile Water, which, from towards Larne flows by Antrim to Lough Neagh at its north eastern angle. The shores of the Bann, and those of the Maine, are alike productive; and with the exclusion of the north-eastern mountains, the generality of the land is fertile; much of it under excellent culture. Coal is worked at Ballycastle, where occur iron ore and steatites, and, in its neighbourhood basalt; crystals are found near the source of the Maine, and curious pebbles on its banks; ochres near Connor; and granite five miles north of Belfast.

THE COUNTY OF ARMAUGH is bounded on the south west by Monaghan, on the north west by Tyrone, on the north by Lough Neagh, on the east by Down, and on the south east by Louth. It extends from north to south 24 Irish miles, and from east to west sixteen. Its surface comprises 181,450 Irish plantation acres, including bogs, mountains and waste; it contains five baronies, Fewes, Turrenny, Armagh, Orior and Onealand; which are divided into twenty-one parishes. The climate in this county is highly salubrious, and the waste lands inconsiderable, as there are few places unfit for the purposes of husbandry. In the centre, or Barony of Fewes, are some high lands and hills that give origin to a branch of the Blackwater, which falls
