DUNGANNON

Is a borough, post and market town, situated on the south and western declivity of a high hill, on the summit of which formerly stood an old castle, said to have been built by the O'Neils, who were then the chiefs of Ulster. It is in the county of Tyrone, distant 73 miles north by west of Dublin, 10 from Armagh, 21 from Omagh, and 32 from Belfast. Dungannon appears to have been a very ancient place. In the reign of James I. letters patent were issued to the Chichester family, granting to them and their heirs for ever the manor of Dungannon, with many privileges rarely conceded in those days. Immediately after this it appears to have increased in trade and population. In consequence of the loyalty of the inhabitants, letters patent appointed Dungannon a borough, to be governed by a portreeve or provost, and twelve burgesses, and directed them to elect two honest, sober and discreet men, as their representatives in parliament. Dungannon still returns one member to the imperial parliament, in the person of the Hon. Thos. Knox, oldest son of Lord Northland. On the site of the old castle T. K. Harrington, esq. erected a handsome building in the modern style of architecture, about the year 1790, which, being on the highest part of the hill, affords a pleasing prospect of the surrounding country. About the same time the present Lord Northland made great improvements, by forming a number of new streets on the western side of the town, commonly called the New Town. The parish church stands nearly in the centre of the place, and is a handsome modern building. The tower and spire were finished a few years ago at the expense of the late Lord Northland, who made the inhabitants a present of an excellent town clock; it has also been lately furnished with a fine toned organ by general subscription. Here are also meeting houses for Presbyterians, and Seceders, a Roman Catholic chapel, and two Methodist preaching houses. In Northland-row there is an academy, or charter school for the education of a number of boys; the Rev. Dr. Dowdall is the present principal. In 1813 a school was built in William-street, for the education of poor children, on the foundation of Erasmus Smyth; it is a neat stone building, and cost upwards of 900l. Another school for girls is supported by Lady Northland, and there is a Sunday school for children of all denominations. In 1814 a yarn hall was erected at the corner of William-street and George's-street. At the head of George's-street stands a baronial gaol and court house; it is in decay, but a site of ground has been laid out for a new one. In 1819 a savings' bank was instituted under the patronage and at the expense of Lord Northland, who also erected a fountain in William-street, which affords the inhabitants an abundant supply of good water. In 1816 a dispensary was established under the superintendance of surgeon Sinclair. Adjoining the town is an extensive brewery and distillery, which employs a considerable number of the inhabitants. A weekly newspaper published in Castle-st. on Thursday, was established in the year 1807, by the late Mr. Canning; it is at present printed and published by Mr. William Douglas, with considerable taste and talent, and seems to be well supported by the inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood. The principal market-day is Thursday, when almost every article in common use is bought and sold, but brown linens, seven-eighths wide, are the principal article. By the report of the linen board in 1816, Dungannon appears to be one of the most considerable linen markets in Ireland, as it has been ascertained, that upwards of 20000l. are laid out weekly in this article. The market for grain, particularly oats, is held on Monday. There is a fair, on the first Thursday in every month, for the sale of cattle, custom free.—The population, according to the census of 1821, was 3348.

POST OFFICE, Market-street.—Post Master, Mr. John Hughes. The Dublin mail is despatched at four in the afternoon, and arrives at ten in the morning. The Belfast mail arrives at a quarter past seven in the morning, and leaves at half-past seven. The Coleraine mail leaves at 20 minutes past ten in the morning, and arrives at ten minutes past three in the afternoon. Letters for England go by the Dublin mail, and letters for Scotland by Belfast and Donaghadee.
