RAPHOE,

IN the county of Donegal, is a small neat town, 107 miles north north west of Dublin, 12 south south west of Derry, six south east of Letterkenny, and eight north north east of Ballybofey. Raphoe was made an episcopal see by St. Eunan about the middle of the sixth century. In the eleventh century the cathedral was erected on the ruins of the church of St. Eunan; and in 1636 Bishop Leslie, aided by government, built the palace, or rather castle, which is a handsome structure, and commands an extensive view of the neighbouring country. In the rebellion of 1641 this palace withstood a long and vigorous siege. A round tower stood here, and a monastery founded by St. Columb. The royal school, founded by King Charles the first, is superintended by the Rev.

James Lewin, as well as a very extensive diocesan library attached to it. The munificent Bishop Foster founded an asylum here for four poor clergymen's widows, which is under the direction of the bishop for the time being, and produces to each 50l. per annum. The town of Raphoe is tolerably well built, and possesses a dispensary, a market house, and a dissenting meeting house. The general market is held on Saturday, and large markets are held on the first Saturday in the months of January, February, March, April, November and December. The fairs are the first of May, the 22nd of June, the 27th of August, and fourth of November. Population about 1600.

RATHFRYLAND

IS a small market town in the county of Down, seated upon an eminence, fifty-seven miles north of Dublin, and seven north-east of Newry; it is in the parishes of Drumgath and Drumballyrone. Its public buildings are a church, a Presbyterian meeting house, and a Roman Catholic chapel. On the summit of the hill are the ruins of an old castle, the ancient residence of the Magennis, Lords of Iveagh. At a little distance is a celebrated spa, the waters of which are strongly chalybeate, and deemed efficacious in scorbutic complaints. The public institutions are a dispensary, open on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays, which is supported by subscriptions and presentments; and a well conducted Sunday school, at which about two hundred and fifty children of both sexes attend. It is in contemplation to erect a school house, for which purpose General Meade, the proprietor of the town, has granted a sufficient plot of ground. The market day is Wednesday, principally for linen yarn, and its fairs are on the second Wednesday in February (Old Style), the second Wednesday in April (Old Style), the Wednesday after Trinity Sunday; the third Wednesday in July (Old Style), the second Wednesday in September (Old Style), and the last Wednesday in November (Old Style).

ROSTREVOR,

IN the county of Down, is one of the most delightful little places in Ireland, seven miles south east of Newry, and pleasantly situated at the north eastern extremity of the bay of Carlingford, at the foot of that extensive range of mountains, which stretches along the southern shores of this county. This place was anciently the seat of the Trevor family, but for many years past has been in the possession of the family of the present proprietor David Ross, esq.; thus from a union of the two family names, the town derives its appellation. On the quay there are hot and cold sea water baths, fitted up in a very superior style, and possessing the advantage of a resident physician; and it is in other respects a very desirable residence for invalids. Rostrevor has for many years past been improving in appearance; it contains a number of excellent houses, and the whole of the surrounding country is of the most beautiful description, diversified with magnificent seats, and elegant houses built in the cottage style. While in front the bay presents its glassy surface to the spectators eye; on the right there is a fine view of Warrenpoint and the beautiful seats between Sea-View and Rostrevor, with the noble monument raised to the memory of the late General Ross, who bravely fell in the service of his country in America; on the left is seen finely contrasted a tremendous precipice of the adjoining mountain, "rude, barren, and bare." At the upper end of the town there is a neat school house, built by the late Mrs. Dawson and the present Miss Belfour, in which about 200 girls receive instruction. Near this spot stands the Roman Catholic chapel, a very neat building, much improved by the Rev. Mr. Gilmore, the present clergyman. The parish church, built in a convenient and commanding situation, is a new and handsome modern Gothic structure, whose lofty tower, buttresses and pinnacles add much to the beauty of the town. The harbour is good, and the quay convenient, on which there is an extensive salt manufactory, besides paper mills, and bleach greens in the neighbourhood. Rostrevor contains an excellent inn for the accommodation of visitors. Fairs are held on the 6th of February, the 1st of March, the 8th of June, the 19th of September, the 1st of November, and the 11th of December, and there is a small market weekly on Tuesday.—About seven miles from this place is the village of KILKEEL, pleasantly situated near the sea; there is nothing particularly attracting in its appearance, but it has been much improved by the proprietor Lord Viscount Kilmorey,
