TULLAMORE,

TULLAMORE, in the King's County, is a handsome market and fair town, divided into two nearly equal parts by a river of the same name, and situate forty-five miles nearly west of Dublin, eight west of Philipstown, five south of Kibbeggan, and ten north-east of Ballyboy. It owes its present thriving condition to the munificent liberality of its noble proprietor, Lord Charleville, who converted an ill formed group of thatched cabins into regular streets, composed of handsome dwellings, which administer to the comforts and conveniences of a wealthy and industrious population; such an example deserves to be imitated by other wealthy proprietors, and the procedure would redound to their immortal honour. The linen manufacture has been introduced here, and, under judicious encouragement, cannot fail to prosper. The barracks for horse and foot are spacious and handsome, and the market house, built at his lordship's expense, is very well adapted for its intended purpose. The Grand Canal, from Dublin to Shannon Harbour, runs close by the town. About a quarter of a mile distant, on the banks of this canal, and near the old road leading from Dublin to Galway, are the ruins of Shragh castle, built in 1588, by John Briscoe, esq, of Crofton Hall, in Cumberland, an officer of high rank and merit in Queen Elizabeth's army, and by his wife Eleanor Kerny, and their son Andrew Briscoe, esq, as appears by a tablet commemorating the event. The church, which is also about a quarter of a mile from the town, is a neat edifice with a handsome tower and one bell, and stands upon a high sandy hill; it was formerly in part surrounded by a deep bog, where there is now fine meadow and rich pasture land. Here is a handsome Roman Catholic chapel, built in the modern style of architecture under the inspection of the Rev. Michael Karney, the parish priest; and besides this there are two Methodist meeting houses. The beneficent institutions of Tullamore are a charity school, built and endowed by the Earl and Countess of Charleville, for an unlimited number of boys and girls, who are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic; two Methodist Sunday schools, one founded in 1813, the other in 1822; and a county infirmary, supported by subscription and county grants. Tullamore has convenient shambles for butcher's meat, and a good market for corn and other provisions; it also possesses a small silk manufactory, three extensive breweries, and a lately erected distillery. Within a short distance from the town is Lord Charleville's beautiful demesne, delightfully wooded with full-grown timber, and judiciously studded with young and thriving plantations. The various cascades contrived at the different falls of the river Cladagh produce a charming effect. Grottos and rustic bridges are tastefully disposed, and his lordship has so naturally formed an artificial excavation of nearly eight acres, that it does not appear to be the work of man; ars est celare artem. The fairs are May the 10th, July the 10th, and October the 21st. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday. The population in 1821, including the parish, was 5444.

POST OFF. E. Church-street.—Post Master, Mr. John Mc Donald. The Dublin mail arrives at fifty minutes past five in the morning, and is despatched at a quarter before seven in the evening. A by-mail is despatched at fifty-eight minutes past five in the morning to Ballyboy, Kilty, and Parsonstown. Letters for England and Scotland by the Dublin mail.
